Financial conditions still loosening in most DMs

Market turmoil has not yet led to a tightening of financial conditions in the US and most other advanced economies. That's because borrowing costs have fallen sharply as investors have grown to expect...

Why do you expect a US soft landing? What about rising credit delinquencies, high interest costs and smaller companies seeing net job losses? What would shift you to the hard landing camp? A blow-out in credit spreads?

There are certainly some concerning signs for the economy in the data, which is why we've marked up our judgement of the probability of a recession to 27% on our

Labour market cracks raise risk of hard landing

The sharp slowdown in payrolls in July and further rise in the unemployment rate cast doubt on the Fed's argument mid-week that it is still too soon to loosen policy. We now expect 25 bp cuts at each...
